INTRODUCTION

This collection is centered around the descendents of Lieutenant Colonel William Polk (1758-1834) of Mecklenburg County, North Carolina, officer in the Revolutionary War; surveyor-general of that part of North Carolina which is now Tennessee; owner of extensive Tennessee lands; representative of Davidson County in the General Assembly of North Carolina (1786); representative of Mecklenburg County in the North Carolina House of Common (1787, 1790-1791); supervisor of United States revenue for the district of North Carolina (1791-1808); president of the North Carolina state bank at Raleigh (1811-1819); trustee of Davidson Academy and the University of North Carolina; Mason; and Federalist, and Colonel John Donelson (1718-1785), surveyor; member of the Virginia House of Burgesses and the Assembly of Virginia during the Revolutionary War; officer in the Revolutionary War; pioneer; land owner; and co-founder with James Robertson of the settlement on the Cumberland River which became Nashville. The major portion of the collection is correspondence of the descendents of Lucius Junius Polk (1803-1870), son of Colonel William Polk, representative from Maury County in the Tennessee Senate (1831); Adjutant General of Tennessee (1851-1853); active Mason; and planter, who built "Hamilton Place" at Ashwood, Maury County, Tennessee. The Yeatman-Polk Collection was placed on deposit in the Manuscript Unit of the Tennessee State Library and Archives by Dr. Trezevant Player Yeatman, Jr., Nashville, Tennessee; Dr. Henry Clay Yeatman, Sewanee, Tennessee; and Mrs. Joseph L. Whiteside, St. Louis, Missouri, children of Trezevant Player and Mary (Wharton) Yeatman.

The materials in this collection measure 47.88 linear feet. There are no restrictions on the papers.

Single photocopies of unpublished writings in the Yeatman-Polk Collection may be made for purposes of scholarly research.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Yeatman-Polk Collection, containing approximately 35,000 items and 60 volumes, extends over the years 900-1970. Most of the papers are however, dated in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The collection is composed of correspondence; accounts; almanacs; awards; biographical and genealogical data; calling cards; cartoons; catalogs; church records; diaries; journals, and memoirs; eulogies; invitations; land records (deeds, grants, survey records, title registrations); legal documents (birth certificates, bonds, and agreements, briefs, charters, internal revenue reports, licenses, petitions, visas); letterbooks, livestock registration; maps; military records (appointments questionnaires); minutes; newspapers clippings; oaths; obituaries; patterns; pension data; photographs and photograph albums; postcards; programs; publications; recipes; reports; school records; scrapbooks, sketches; speeches; time books; wills and estate papers; and writings.

The most prominent figure in the collection is Mary Eastin (Wharton) Yeatman (1883-1970), wife, mother, and community and church leader, who through her marriage to Trezevant Player Yeatman (1871-1959) in 1913, united in the twentieth century the families of John Donelson (1718-1785), surveyor, member of the Virginia House of Burgesses and the Assembly of Virginia during the Revolutionary War; officer in Revolutionary War; pioneer; land owner; and co-founder with James Robertson of the settlement on the Cumberland River became Nashville, and Lieutenant Colonel William Polk (1758-1834), of Mecklenburg County, North Carolina, officer in the Revolutionary War; surveyor-general of that part of North Carolina which is now part of Tennessee; owner of extensive Tennessee lands; representative of Davidson County in the General Assembly of North Carolina (1786); representative of Mecklenburg County in the North Carolina House of Commons (1787, 1790-1791); supervisor of United States revenue for the district of North Carolina (1791-1808); president of the North Carolina state bank at Raleigh (1811-1819); trustee of Davidson Academy and the University of North Carolina; Mason; and Federalist.

Mary Yeatman's correspondence composed of 1,081 letters written between 1899 and 1968, is predominately with members of her family. Her early correspondence is with her sisters, Sarah (Wharton) Walker (1875-1903) and Anne Louise (Wharton) (1885-), and her brothers, William Henry (1878-1954) and Richard Currey (1838-1899) and Mary Eliza (Currey) Wharton (1849-1893). Later correspondence is with her husband and her children, Trezevant Player, Jr. (1914-), Henry Clay (1916-), and Mary Jane (1918-), as well as other family members and friends. In addition to familial interests, her letters mention politics, economic conditions during the 1929 depression, Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, and World War II. They are concerned with organization such as the DAR, the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation, the Student's Club of Columbia, and the Protestant Episcopal Church in Tennessee.

In collection there is correspondence from five generation of the Donelson family. The earliest letters are from Captain John Donelson (1755-1830). Written in 1825 and 1829, they deal primarily with family news and the death of William Eastin Donelson's son-in-laws. Six letters of William Eastin deal with business, the cotton trade, and the factorage system. Additional correspondents of the Donelson and Eastin families include Andrew Jackson Donelson (2 letters), Daniel Smith Donelson (1 letter), Eliza (Eastin) Donelson

(3 letters), Emily Tennessee Donelson (2 letters), Margaret (Branch) Donelson (2 letters), Samuel Donelson (1 letter), and Susie Eastin (7 letters). Three letters of John Donelson Eastin are concerned with cotton and slavery.

The Donelson and Polk families were first united in 1832 in the White House when Lucius Junius Polk (1803-1870), representative from Maury County in the Tennessee Senate (1831); Adjutant General of Tennessee (1851-1853); active Mason; and planter, married Mary Ann Eastin (1810-1847), daughter of William and Rachel Eastin and a favorite niece of President Andrew Jackson. Lucius Polk, third son of Colonel William Polk, had settled in Maury County, Tennessee, on the water's of Carter's Creek in 1823. Eight years later when he and three brothers, Leonidas (1806-1864), each received from their father about thirteen hundred acres of land lying in a tract six or eight miles west of Columbia, Tennessee, on the Mt. Pleasant turnpike, Lucius built "Hamilton Place". To that home he carried his bride the following year.

The sons of Colonel William Polk were wealthy and influential planters in Maury County. John Catron wrote of Lucius Polk in 1825, "I have never seen a more energetic (sic), prompt, and certain man..." Thirty-nine letters of Lucius J. Polk, written between 1820 and 1870, make this evident. His letters include topics such as cotton trade and cotton prices, slavery, land, the railroads, debt, and politics. They provide not only an interesting picture of Middle Tennessee plantation life, but also a picture of southern economic and political life in the antebellum period.

The collection contains correspondence of all ten of Lucius Polk's children. Eight children were borne by his first wife Mary Ann Eastin. Two children were borne by Ann (Erwin) Pope (1823-1858) whom Polk married six years after the death of his first wife in 1847. There are thirty-eight letters by Sarah Rachel (Polk) Jones; twenty-three letters of Emily Donelson (Polk) Williams; twenty letters of Frances Anne (Polk) Dillion; forty-nine letters of Susan Rebecca (Polk) Brown; forty-six letters of George Washington Polk; fifteen letters of Lucius Junius Polk, Jr.; and fourteen letters of Ella (Polk) Cooper. The most interesting letters are those of Will Polk, Mary Brown (Polk) Yeatman, and Eliza Eastin Polk. These children of Lucius J. Polk lived part or all of their adult lives at "Hamilton Place" Fifty-one letters of Eliza Polk provide a very interesting picture of life in life in Tennessee from 1851-1893.

After the marriage of Mary Brown Polk and Henry Clay Yeatman in 1858, "Hamilton Place" became the home of Yeatman and Bell families and well as the Polk family. Henry Clay Yeatman (1831-1910), businessman, commercial agent, and aide-de-camp to General Leonidas Polk during the Civil War, was the son of Thomas Yeatman (1787-1833) and Jane Erwin (1797-1877). A wealthy merchant and banker in Nashville, Tennessee, Thomas Yeatman formed a partnership in a commission business with Robert Woods in 1820 and founded the banking firm of Woods, Yeatman and Company, which at one time maintained a branch office as far east as Baltimore. At his death in 1833 Yeatman's widow and children were heirs to an estate valued at $500, 000. One letter of Thomas Yeatman, written in the year of his death, is in the collection.

About three years later the most eligible widow in Nashville married one of the most eligible widowers. John Bell (1797-1869), lawyer; Tennessee state legislator (1817); United States Representatives from Tennessee (1827-1841); Speaker of the House of Representatives (1834); Secretary of War (1841); United States Senator from Tennessee (1847-1859); a founder of the Whig Party; and Presidential candidate on the Constitutional Union Ticket (1860), married Jane (Erwin) Yeatman. Contained in the Yeatman papers are six letters of the Honorable John Bell. Written primarily to Henry Yeatman between 1852 and 1861, they express Bell's political interests as well as his business matters. One letter, written to the Honorable Henry S. Foote in 1861, concerns the appointment of William H. Seward as Secretary of War by President Lincoln. 1852 was formative year for both the Whig Party, defeated by the Democrats in the national election, and for Cumberland Iron Works, Stewart County, Tennessee, in which Bell and Henry Yeatman each had extensive financial interests. Also included in the collection are seventy-eight letters of Jane Bell, 1850-1870, which mention politics, position on Kansas-Nebraska, Millard Fillmore and John J. Crittenden, as well as Washington society and family news.

The correspondence of Henry Clay Yeatman (360 letters), written predominately to members of his family after the Civil War, shows the economic changes brought about by that war. Unlike his father and his step-father, Harry Yeatman was not wealthy after the war. The Cumberland Iron Works of Woods, Yeatman, and Company declined in the post-war period. In 1876, when only one of the four blast furnaces was operating, the business was sold.* Wealthy coal and iron businesses moved South to ore-rich Birmingham, Alabama. Yeatman soon became involved in copper mining in Blue Wing, Granville County, North Carolina. This venture, too, was unsuccessful. In addition to his iron and copper interests, Henry Yeatman's letters mention farming, cotton and the commercial merchant business in New Orleans, land, travels in Europe and the Middle East, economic conditions, the cholera epidemic in Nashville at the end of the Civil War, and many family matters. His interest in state, national, and international politics is apparent through the mention of such events and personalities as John Catron, Archibald Campbell, Harriet Beecher Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin, the Republican Party, the secession movement, the Confederacy, the French Alliance of 1853, South Africa in 1895/96, and the Spanish-American War. Sixty-five letters, 1856-1882, of Mary (Polk) Yeatman provide illuminating information about the Yeatman family and Henry Yeatman's business interests.

Two older brothers of Henry Clay Yeatman assumed positions of national importance during the Civil War. James Erwin Yeatman (1818-1901), banker, civic leader, and philanthropist, was president of the Western Sanitary Commission, created by order of Major-General John C. Fremont at St. Louis, September 5, 1861. Cooperating with Dorothea Lynde Dix (1802-1887), then in St. Louis, Yeatman did much to mitigate the misery of the war. Though few of the eight-four letters of James Yeatman written during the war period deal with the Commission, they do mention such business and political topics as the Republican and Democratic parties, politics of the 1860s, slavery, Civil War prisoners, oaths of allegiance and amnesty, and cotton trade in 1865, as well as personalities such as Generals McPherson, Sherman, Grant, and Halleck. Additionally, he touches upon the role of his brother Thomas during the war. His letters also mention such post-war topics as Democratic Convention of 1876 and President Garfield. Particularly interesting is James's reconciliation with his brother Henry Yeatman's oath of allegiance 1865, is a part of the collection. Contained in the collection also are eight letters of Dorothea Lynde Dix, a Unitarian, nurse, and social reform leader.

See land record book of subdivision of lands of Woods, Yeatman, and Company, 1876, in the collection.

Thirty-six letters of Henry Yeatman's second brother, Thomas Yeatman (1828-1890), lawyer, Union officer, professor, and philanthropist, who lived and married in Paris, France, after the Civil War, mention topics of national and international politics. One scholar has suggested that Thomas Yeatman attempted to contract a reconciliation movement between the Union and Confederacy in 1863. When that movement, unpopular to Lincoln and the Republicans, failed, Yeatman left the United States. At a school which he and his wife Leonis Monoury later established in Paris, Yeatman helped to educate his step-sisters, Jenny Bell (1838-1917) and Nanny (Bell) Comegys (1841-1919), as well as Mary Polk (Yeatman) Webb, the oldest daughter of Henry Clay Yeatman.

A second nineteenth century marriage in the Eastin family later united the Donelson and Polk families. Ten years after the marriage of Lucius Junius and Mary Ann (Eastin) Polk, Rachel Jackson, the youngest child of William Eastin, married Doctor Richard Owen Currey (1816-1865), State Geologist, doctor, teacher, minister, and Confederate surgeon. Four letters of Currey, 1843-1858, concern business, the railroads politics and the Whig Party. A letter of January 28, 1848, written to Major and Mrs. A.J. Donelson, gives an interesting description of East Tennessee University at Knoxville, as well as excellent comments on Polk and the Mexican War. In addition, the collection contains five letters Rachel Jackson Currey (1822-1865), including one to General Schofield seeking permission to carry personal possessions beyond rebel lines. Permission was granted. Also included is one letter of Robert Browlee Currey (1773-1848), Post Master of Nashville (1801-1836) and Mayor of Nashville at the time of General Lafayette's visit in 1825.

Mary Eliza Currey (1849-1893), daughter of Richard O. Currey, married William Henry Wharton (1838-1899), a Nashville druggist, who led had fought for the Confederacy. Wharton's father, William Henry (1796-1871), doctor, newspaper editor, and a Tennessee State Librarian, had been imprisoned at Camp Chase, Ohio, during the Civil War. Two letters, in addition to his release and parole, signed by Military Governor Andrew Johnson are included in the collection. Thirty-nine letters of William Wharton, Jr., and fifteen of Mary (Currey) Wharton are primarily family letters.

Mary (Wharton) Yeatman was a daughter of William Henry and Mary (Currey) Wharton. Included in the collection is the family correspondence of her two brothers and two sisters. The most interesting letters (449) are those of her younger sister, Anne Louise Wharton (1885-); included are letters about Miss Wharton's work as an itinerant nurse for the Red Cross in the early 1930's in which she comments on the economic conditions of the depression and the New Deal programs of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. As a nurse in Hawaii during the late 1930s, Miss Wharton described Oahu and the role of the Hawaiian Islands during that period, the Sino-Japanese conflict in 1938, and the Japanese-American relations in 1939.

Trezevant Player Yeatman, sixth child of Henry Clay and Mary (Polk) Yeatman, and his wife Mary Wharton lived at "Hamilton Place". Of the eight children of Henry Yeatman, only Trezevant and Jenny Bell survived their father. Included in the collection is correspondence of each of Henry Yeatman's children who reached (96 letters); Russell Houston (7 letters); Trezevant Player (130 letters); Jenny Bell (161 letters); and Lucia Polk (29 letters). Correspondence of Trezevant Player, Henry Clay, and Mary Jane (Yeatman) Whiteside, children of Trezevant and Mary Yeatman, is also included.

Among other letters are those of prominent political figures William Jennings Bryan, William G. Brownlow, John Catron, Andrew Jackson, and Daniel Webster. While the letters of Brownlow are primarily concerned with Tennessee politics and the Whig Party, Catron's nine letters discuss national politics and the election of 1828. One of Webster's letters is an introduction of Henry Yeatman to the American embassies in Europe in 1852. Additionally, a letter by H. Jay Wilkins gives an account of the Battle of Gettysburg, 1863, by a participant.

Of prominence in the remainder of the Yeatman-Polk Collection are the diaries and journals of Henry Clay Yeatman and Mary (Wharton) Yeatman. Four diaries of Henry Yeatman, written while traveling in Europe and the Middle East during the early 1850s, contain interesting and detailed descriptions of the places he visited and the things he saw. Later diaries of Henry Yeatman contain comments on politics, economics, and family matters. The diaries of Mary (Wharton) Yeatman, 1924, 1931, 1933-1954, are filled with family news as well as comments on contemporary society.

Contained in the collection are a history of Zion Presbyterian Church and church records of baptisms, confirmations, marriages, and burials, 1842-1848 and 1875-1880, of St. John Episcopal Church at Ashwood, Tennessee. There is a dinner invitation from President and Mrs. Franklin Pierce to the Honorable John Bell and Mrs. Bell. This collection is rich in genealogical and historical data. Family data as well as information on historic house of Middle Tennessee is extensive. Also included are a photographs; and post cards.

The remainder of the Yeatman-Polk Collection is made up of land records composed of deeds, grants, maps, survey records, and title registrations; legal documents, including the reports of Colonel William Polk when he was supervisor of United States Revenue for the District of North Carolina, bonds and agreements, legal briefs and Henry Yeatman's visas; and newspaper clippings of family and historical importance.
