The Education Gospel. This introduction blends several narrative and analytical strands. We learn about: the author's personal experience working in the for-profit sector, including the story of a potential student; her understanding of that sector as an outcome of changes in the labor market; the role of cultural attitudes towards education; what the rest of the book will explore. Professor Cottom's autobiography is heartbreaking. She begins the book by hoping that she "did not" have a powerful impact on one student, the opposite of what educators usually desire, then gradually describes that Discover the book of Acts. A free 12-week Bible Study on Acts from Crossway. Gospel glimpses, whole-Bible connections, theology, practice, and more. In this opening chapter of Acts, Luke introduces several important gospel perspectives that recur throughout the rest of the book. Chief among them is that the book of Acts is first and foremost a book about Jesus. He is the primary character of the book and the focus of all its events. The Education Gospel is amiably written and forcefully argued...What Grubb and Lazerson have produced collaboratively is a provocative contrarian tract about schools, colleges, job training, and politics...This book is a powerful and salutary assault on educational evangelism, and a compassionate plea that meritocracy may have some new requirements for social justice., Grubb and Lazerson have written a very important book; the. The Economic Power of Schooling. W. Norton Grubb. Marvin Lazerson. We're continuing our book club series with a look at one devoted to Toni Morrison. Toni Morrison's untimely death in 2019 gave me the idea of a year-long book club dedicated to her, to gather all of her fans and those who still haven't touched her genius, to pay homage to the gifted writer, said book club creator Aayushi Jain. The book club, was a success, and we are left with only one book for December and have finished all of her fiction. For #NonFictionNovember, the group read The Origin of Others, based on Morrison's Charles Eliot Norton Lectures.
