Clark wasted no words while Lewis was a story teller and their cohesive voices took me on an uncharted journey to the west coast through land that no white man had yet seen at that time. I've followed many parts of the trails while reading their words. I've stood where they stood and I've read their words while envisioning what they saw. The Journals of Lewis and Clark are words that can change your life. This is historical reading at its finest. ...more. flag 5 likes · Like · see review. "Clark Field Notes--Keelboat" William Clark Field Notes, 1804, page showing keelboat. The following journal excerpts were compiled by Florentine Films in preparation for the making of "Lewis and Clark: The Journey of the Corps of Discovery." The excerpts "drawn from the separate, more extensive journals of Captains Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, Sergeants Charles Floyd, Patrick Gass, and John Ordway, and Private Joseph Whitehouse" were then put together in chronological order. Altogether, the entries of these seven Corps members span March 3, 1804, to September 26, 1806, total The Lewis and Clark Expedition from August 31, 1803, to September 25, 1806, also known as the Corps of Discovery Expedition, was the United States expedition to cross the newly acquired western portion of the country after the Louisiana Purchase. The Corps of Discovery was a select group of U.S. Army and civilian volunteers under the command of Captain Meriwether Lewis and his close friend Second Lieutenant William Clark. The expedition made its way westward, and crossed the Continental Divide of the

This compiled version of excerpts from Lewis and Clark's journals tells the amazing story of their trek across the unexplored western frontier. Much of the excerpts are brief descriptions of the animals, geography, and flora observed in their travels. It is amazing to imagine the country as they saw it. Transcriber's Note: These Journals are from May 14, 1804, the day the expedition left the Mississippi River, to September 26, 1806, a day or two after they arrived back in St. Louis. It includes all possible Journal entries of Lewis and Clark. Most of the "courses and distances" and "celestial observations" have been omitted. The notes and most of the corrections of past editors have been removed. There are a few OCR errors, but most of the misspellings are almost 200 years old. The dates with the names in the brackets are a little redundant. They are included to provi Journal Excerpts. 1803. Aug 31, 1803. Discovering Lewis & Clark from the Air. Pittsburgh. Aug 31, 1803.
