

California in 1792: The Expedition of Jos  Longinos Mart nez / Jos  Longinos Mart nez

"Mozino was official 'botanist-naturalist' on an expedition of Juan Francisco de la Bodega y Quadra, sent to investigate the Spanish 'Limits to the North of California' in 1792 and to represent his nation in a vital confrontation with the English. Nootka Sound, a sheltered inlet on Vancouver Island, was the focal point of this excitement...Jose Mariano Mozino, an able scientist, Mexican born and educated, busied himself with a thorough investigation of the land and its people. With the aid of his assistants, he was the first to make an in-depth study of the language, c 17 Jos  Longinos Mart nez, California in 1792: The Expedition of Jos  Longinos Mart nez, trans. by Lesley Byrd Simpson, (San Marino, Calif.: Huntington Library Publications, 1938), 46. In the 1770's, Spain initiated the exploration of the coast north of California to investigate the rumors of a northwest passage between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans -- and to check whether the Russians were expanding south through Alaska. He was followed by the naturalist Jos  Longino, who traveled from Baja California to San Diego, Santa Barbara, Monterey and San Francisco, describing the houses, customs, clothing and boats of California Indian tribes in his diaries. In 1792, Francisco de la Bodega y Quadra left Mexico for his third expedition to the north to carry out the accord with the British captain George Vancouver on what came to be called Vancouver Island.
