Professional burnout in healthcare "is technology the cause and the solution? Estimated reading time: 9-11 minutes. Loss of enthusiasm. Low self-esteem." For health technology companies like Philips, we have had to recognize that whilst digital technologies and data-led medicine can break new ground and, in some cases, even be a savior. But too often these tools are also adding to the daily burden and complexities being asked of care teams. Poor integration of technology can often result in doctors working more hours but spending less time with patients. Electronic health records (EHRs) are a major culprit, and both anecdotal and empirical evidence reveals many flaws in the way they operate, and the way clinicians use them. Physicians and other helping professionals have created a practical, hands-on book that will aid in the identification a... It offers a thorough understanding of professional burnout, elaborating how burnout develops and offering a model with which to identify job stressors. Professional Burnout in Medicine and the Helping Professions also offers an in-depth exploration of stress and burnout issues from the perspectives of specific medical and helping profession disciplines--physicians, nurses, social workers, psychotherapists, teachers, consultants, agency and hospital workers, funeral directors, and more.
