Meanwhile... Wham!

Comic and its communication value in organizational context

Henrik Schrader (Schrat)

Department of Management
Supervisor: Professor Heather Höpfl

A thesis submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy

October 2010
Summary

This thesis begins with The Pink Suit, a comic strip I have created which comments on an interventionist social art project, the Manager in Residence Project. In this respect, this doctorate resides at the nexus between the arts and the social sciences. A personal level the forms the background, me as artist writing a thesis in the management department at Essex Business School. The thesis develops a framework premised on the history and epistemology of both social science and art, placing a particular focus on the field of organizational studies.

Within this tradition I discuss the controversial relationship in western culture between knowledge generated by text on the one hand and pictures on the other. This relationship is exemplified in the comic medium.

Potential of comic is examined, both as a tool for communication about organizations, and as an example of the transgression between different types of knowledge. The interplay between pictures and text in a given comic page is organized by its own medium-specific rules. Comparisons to other forms of visual display of data like maps and organigrams convey both similarities and differences to already established praxis. The sequential manner in which a comic unfolds is fundamental to the means by which its diagrammatic elements underlie its narrative.
Ultimately, I conclude by presenting eight different features of comic which help illuminate issues of communication within organizational contexts.

As regards epistemology and ontology, I suggest ultimately that increasing the awareness and interpretation of visual knowledge both broadens the means by which organizational data can be presented and enhances our understanding of the world.
Acknowledgements

I would like to thank all those who have been patient with me during the course of my doctorate. I have to excuse for being absent minded, for not having time and for a lack of devotion towards them. I would especially like to thank Christine, my wife, and my children Karl and Josefine.

I would like to thank my supervisor Heather Höpfl, whose diligent scholarship and encouragement have lent me reassurance during the intellectual and emotional journey that has characterised my doctorate. Thank you for letting me to take this gamble, and for allowing me to develop my thoughts in my own way.

I would like to thank a great number of researchers, who stimulated my interest in organizational studies and other fields of science at the first place. My interest in this exchange has been growing ever since. In numerous conversations our exchange was and is a promising field for research and experiments. More fruits wait to be grown and harvested.
Their respect and honest curiosity towards an artist genuinely enhanced my interpretation of the world.

I could not leave out my PhD colleagues at Essex with whom I have shared the highs and lows that accompany such an endeavour. I am grateful for insightful discussions, and for the time and effort invested in providing feedback on early versions of my written work. I hope that I can return these favours one day.
I would like to dedicate my doctorate to my father. He died during the course of this thesis. In his last days I was close to him, working on the thesis in the room upstairs to his. He would not have read it; he was a humble carpenter. But he was a man full of energy and passion. He was a very religious man, who shared his faith with whoever he encountered. Without his example and verve for understanding the world in his own way, I doubt very much I would have had the energy to complete this degree. He did not share my way of life, nor did I share his; but we met on common ground of respect and love. May his god bless him.
Table of Contents

1. Introduction
1.1. The hairy fish
1.2. Lavatory poetry
1.3. Power-point text

2. Overview.
2.1. General introductions
2.1.1. In self-reflexive circles
2.1.2. On the position of the author
2.1.3. Indisciplin: The writing style and attitude
2.1.4. On explicitness
2.1.5. Organizational Studies and Art
2.1.6. What kind of art is discussed?
2.2. The chapters

3. Institutions and Discourses
3.1. The doctorate enters the arts
3.2. Practice based doctorates. Masters in their own field
3.3. Theory as art practice. The doctorate as art

4. The Manager in Residence Project
4.1. The project and the Comic 4.2. The Pink Suit 1 - The documentary part
4.3. Method as Form: Inversion, Participation and Mimicry
4.4. The Manager in Residence and the comic as inversion
4.4.1. Manager in Residence as Arts-In-Business
4.5. The Pink Suit 2 - The starship-level
4.5.1. General Settings and Technique
4.5.2. Science Fiction
4.5.3. More Inversions
4.5.4. How the Comic Operates
4.6. Understanding both parts together

5. History
5.1. Introduction
5.2. Enlightenment versus Romanticism -
  The family tree of this doctorate
5.3. Forerunner: Vico versus Descartes
5.4. Disenchantment of the world.
  Enlightenment and Romanticism
4.5. Relativism
4.6. What to do and how to do
Bibliography

If not stated otherwise, the years behind the author give the year of the original publication, and the year of the edition quoted.

The present text is an updated version of an essay originally commissioned by the Dutch magazine, Metropolis M, and which appeared in Dutch as ‘Jacques Rancière: Esthetiek is politiek.’ Metropolis M. 26 (2005) 4 (Aug/Sept) p. 64–72.

33. britannica.com/EBchecked/topic/342977/Theodor-Lipps, accessed 06/09

44. Crumb, Robert (1979 / 97) A short history of America. The work was first published 1979 in Whole Earth Catalog’s offspring CoEvolution Quarterly. Portola Institute, Point Foundation. As an animation one frame after the other, it can be seen on: http://www.zubeworld.com/crumbmuseum/history1.html The animation of the original black and white artwork is authorised by Crumb and shown in the movie Crumb. In 1997, Crumb added three new panels showing possible future scenarios.

68. Peyerabend, Paul ([1984]) Wissenschaft als Kunst. (Science as Art). Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp

97. Heron, John; Reason, Peter (1997) A Participative Inquiry Paradigm. Qualitative Inquiry 3(3)

143. Meisiek, Stefan; Hatch, Mary-Jo; (2008) This is work, this is play: Artful Interventions and Identity Dynamics. in: Barry, Daved; Hanson, Hans; (ed) (2008) New Approaches in Management and Organization. London: Sage

158. Peirce, Charles (1886) An Elementary Account of the Logic of Relatives. WCE V 397-387,

Organizational communication means communication among people in an organization. To understand the meaning of the term, let us first analyze the meaning of related terms such as organization, organize, and communication. An organization is a group of people who are working together towards a common goal or for a particular purpose. In communication studies, organizational communication is a field of study, that focuses on the communication and information flow within organizations through different roles of the media. The flow of communication within the members, individuals and organizations could be either formal or informal. The field traces its lineage through business information, business communication, and early mass communication studies published in the 1930s through the 1950s. Until then, organizational communication discusses the dynamics of social life and global conditions as a rationale for the study of intercultural communication. Intercultural communication can also involve barriers like stereotyping and discrimination. And these relationships take place in complex historical and political contexts. Start studying Organizational Communication. Learn vocabulary, terms and more with flashcards, games and other study tools. Organisational Communication Notes - Free download as PDF File (.pdf), Text File (.txt) or read online for free.