Twenty-two years later she has re-organized, re-written, changed the subtitle provided many new quotes and references, and added 80+ pages. The Ethics of Caring is a unique ethics text designed to guide the self-compassionate self-reflection of both students and professionals (therapists, clergy, hospice workers, bodyworkers, educators, medical professionals, mentors, and other caregivers) toward understanding human motivations and countertransference, finding professional right relationship, and making good choices with clients. Highly recommended for Holotropic Breathwork facilitators and sitters. Care ethics refers to approaches to moral life and community that are grounded in virtues, practices, and knowledges associated with appropriate caring and caretaking of self and others. In contrast to ethical theories that assume the paradigm of moral reasoning to be As philosopher Virginia Held has written, a fundamental premise of care ethics is that morality should address issues of caring and empathy and relationships between people rather than only or primarily the rational decisions of solitary moral agents (1995: 1). Proponents of care ethics describe realms of caring such as good parenting, friendship, and community membership as relationships that foster human development, social.
