

Municipal Composting: Resources for Local Officials and Community Organizations / Institute for Local Self-Reliance, 1980 / 1980 / David Macgregor

Kirjaluettelon tiedot. Otsikko. Municipal Composting: Resources for Local Officials and Community Organizations. Kirjoittaja. David Macgregor. Avustaja. Institute for Local Self-Reliance. Kustantaja. Institute for Local Self-Reliance, 1980. Alkuperäinen sijainti. Michiganin yliopisto. Municipal enterprises are businesses owned by local governments that provide services and typically generate revenue for local communities. Local governments have long operated public utilities and. One of the first major realms of municipal enterprise was public power. As early as the 1880s, local governments began forming public power companies to provide electrification in areas that investor-owned utilities deemed unprofitable. Today, there are more than 2,000 community-owned electric utilities serving more than 47 million people across the United States, including residents of large cities such as Los Angeles, Orlando, Nashville, Jacksonville, San Antonio, Sacramento, Memphis, Omaha, and Seattle. State and municipal (public) administration as a scientific specialty includes studies of the organization, administrative procedures and management processes for the formation and implementation of state and municipal policies, as well as the development of measures to improve them. The objects of the research are the state and local government bodies, other state and municipal enterprises, institutions and other organizations of the public sector, as well as interstate organizations and NPOs, and other politicians. The subject of the scientific